Impact of new technologies on the press in Europe

In view of the crisis facing the written press, which has been aggravated by the advances made by electronic media, the Committee has proposed a series of initiatives, based on the report by Katerina DASKALAKI (UFE, Gr), to guarantee the specific role and permanence of the written word. There is a need for a suitable legal and institutional framework to protect journalists' social and labour rights, protection of intellectual property rights and harmonized rules for low or even zero-rated VAT for newspapers and periodicals. Consideration should also be given to common rules on reducing postal, telecommunications and freight charges for the press. The report also considers the need for reflection within the industry on self-regulation to prevent the sensationalism and invasions of privacy that are the hallmark of certain scandal sheets. Finally the Commission was asked to produce a communication analysing the various problems facing the written press with regard to competition and the preservation of pluralism. ?

Impact of new technologies on the press in Europe

Adopting the own initiative report by Mrs Katerina DASKALAKI (UPE, EL) on the impact of new technologies upon the press in Europe, the European Parliament called for measures designed to guarantee the role, individuality and permanent nature of the press in the face of the impact of new technologies. In particular, it urged the European Commission to present a communication on the problems created for the press as regards competition and the maintaining of pluralism. It also called for: - the creation of a legal and institutional framework to protect the social and professional rights of journalists; - consideration to be given to the downward harmonization of VAT on newspapers and periodicals (possibly even zero rating); - the introduction of common rules on reducing postal, telecommunications and freight charges; - thought to be given within the profession to the case for self-regulation with a view to avoiding sensationalism in the press and intrusive coverage of individuals' private lives.?
