TACIS: cross-border cooperation

OBJECTIVE: The communication sets out the Community's policy on crossborder cooperation within the framework of the TACIS programme up to 1999. SUBSTANCE: One of the key factors for crossborder cooperation in the region is the need to ensure the stability of the common frontier of the EU and the former Soviet republics (the 'newly independent states' or NIS) following Finland's accession to the EU, and to lay the foundations of sustainable social and economic development among the frontier communities. This form of cooperation is part of a broader policy for the strengthening of relations between border regions of the EU, the countries of central and eastern Europe (CCEE) and the NIS. Crossborder cooperation is also part of the pre-accession strategy of the CCEE, in the context of complementary funding for border-crossing facilities (in particular, so as to address the increasing concern which has arisen about the inadequacy of the borders concerned, and to promote crossborder relations, especially where problems relating to minorities still exist). In this connection, the Commission considers that crossborder cooperation should be reinforced, and that priority should go to projects characterized by a high degree of local or regional commitment. These projects should concern the following aspects: 1) improvement of the effectiveness of border control and transit, especially via the strengthening of existing networks and the creation of appropriate infrastructure. In particular, the aim should be to facilitate local border transit and to reinforce the crossings linking the EU, the CCEE and the NIS; 2) assistance to help border regions overcome their specific development problems stemming from being on the periphery of their national economies, especially via the establishment of links between border networks and the creation of joint ventures; 3) action to address the two main types of crossborder ecological problem. those for which simultaneous action is needed on both sides of the border (e.g. pollution of border lakes), and those whose effects are felt on the 'other' side only (e.g. upstream waste): in this context, it will be necessary to finance studies of local ecological problems and to make follow-up investment in support infrastructure (for instance, via the continuation of Community actions already begun under the EC's fifth environmental action plan). Concerning the priority aspects, the Commission considers that in its first years the programme should focus on institutional support and the development of crossborder networks (frontier management). Other priorities should include the creation of direct links between border communities (via joint ventures), and ecological projects. Geographically speaking, this cooperation will especially concern the frontiers between the NIS and the Community and between the NIS and the Baltic states. It will also relate to the frontiers between the CCEE and Russia, Ukraine, Belarus and Moldova. On the approach to be adopted, the Commission considers that local and regional authorities should be involved as fully as possible. Synergies with other Community programmes should be identified (especially with INTERREG and the PHARE crossborder cooperation programme). Special attention should be paid to small-scale projects, local actions and consciousness-raising actions. ?

TACIS: cross-border cooperation

The Committee has unanimously adopted the motion for a resolution on the inclusion of cross-border cooperation in the Tacis programme. While acknowledging that the Tacis CBC programme (which is designed to support viable cross-border programmes) can be considered a successful initiative, the rapporteur, Anna KARAMANOÛ (PES, Gr), believes there is still plenty of room for improvement. Where there are considerable differences between the living standards on either side of a frontier (e.g. the Russo-Finnish border), one of the main aims of the CBC programme must be to promote development of these regions, which are underdeveloped because of their peripheral location in the national economy. Cooperation with international economic organisations is also needed, so as to make joint funding of programmes more viable and stimulate synergy with other EU programmes such as Interreg. As regards cooperation on the environment, the rapporteur stresses the need to combat the chief sources of pollution from the regions directly bordering on Finland, by taking action on the most sensitive problems such as the dumping of toxic waste in the Baltic Sea, the contamination of drinking water and the nuclear safety problems in Russia. In more general terms, Ms Karamanou notes that the Commission, in its communication, merely charts out a general policy on cross-border cooperation up to 1999 under the Tacis programme and that, in the absence of clear practical proposals on implementation measures, the effectiveness of the Tacis-CBC programme is unlikely to be improved. In this connection, the Tacis machinery needs to be made more transparent in future, the size of the bureaucracy reduced and responsibilities within the Commission better allocated, so as to make the measures adopted more effective. As regards monitoring of the implementation of the programmes, cross-border cooperation committees need to be set up at regional level to enhance the role of regional administrations as the sole decision-taking bodies. The motion for a resolution therefore states that the training and development of local and regional administrations must be among the priorities of the CBC programme. In budgetary terms, the committee calls for increased funding for the programme, which is to be found by steadily increasing the appropriations earmarked for it and ensuring that they are used efficiently. ?

In adopting the report by Mrs Anna KARAMANOY (PSE, GR) on the Tacis programme, Parliament welcomed the introduction of cross-border cooperation in this programme but considered that the budget appropriations available for this purpose were insufficient. This cooperation required resources if the stability of regions close to the EU's borders and to the borders of future member states was to be preserved. Future regional policy should increasingly stress such cooperation. It called on the Commission to bear in mind the enlargement when implementing the Tacis-CBC programme so as to strengthen the new external borders of the EU. Parliament, which stressed the importance of the principle of partnership and decentralisation of activities, considered that care should be taken to ensure that cross-border cooperation should contribute towards maintaining peace and security, respect for human rights and the protection of minorities. It also considered that the role of the regions was important in the process of unification and coexistence of the peoples of Europe. With regard to the Tacis guidelines the Commission should use the model of democratic co-decision used in the structural measures and should support small projects. Parliament also stressed the importance of coordinating the Union's cross-border cooperation programmes (Phare, Tacis, Interreg) in order to avoid overlapping. Joint funding could be provided for this purpose. It considered that the joint cross-border programmes should be prepared at regional level for sections of the frontier, rather than for the whole length of national borders, and on the basis of a joint socio-economic analysis. In future Tacis cross-border cooperation should be based on integrated multiannual programming so as to make it more consistent with other programmes. Parliament also regretted that the effectiveness of the programme had been affected by the bureaucratic procedures. It was therefore necessary to alter the existing system to reduce the Commission's administrative bias. It also regretted the lack of information about projects and the excessive centralisation of the Tacis administration (in major capitals). It therefore called for resources to be allocated to regional offices. Lastly, Parliament called for the Tacis-CBC programmes to define the environmental policy objectives (in particular along the Russia-Union border) and for a strengthening of the provisions on training, business development, new technologies and SMUs and a revision of public tender contracts so as to ensure that regional authorities participate in projects. It also called for the Commission to put forward the creation of a specific Baltic Sea Programme ?
