Human rights: activities of the European Union in 1996. Annual memorandum

OBJECTIVE: the annual memorandum to the European Parliament summarises all the activities of the European Union in the field of human rights throughout the world in 1996. CONTENT: in addition to participating at various international human rights fora, such as the General Assembly of the United Nations, the OSCE or the Council of Europe, at which numerous declarations or resolutions on the observance of human rights have been adopted, the memorandum lists over 40 declarations and 80 measures in which the European Union has taken an official position on human rights violations throughout the world in 1996. Of these main positions taken, note should be made in particular of those relating to: - south-east Europe, especially Albania (with the call for new elections following those held in May 1996), Cyprus (where the violent acts perpetrated there have been criticised) and Turkey (where the European Union has emphasised its insistence on the observance of human rights); - central and eastern Europe, especially the countries of the former USSR (where the European Union has taken a position with respect to Russia and Chechnya and support for humanitarian organisations on the ground); - Asia, with numerous positions taken on the People's Republic of Korea (following the violation of the armistice agreement), Eastern Timor and Burma. In addition, human rights clauses have been included as a fundamental element in cooperation agreements signed with Vietnam, Cambodia et Laos; - the Middle East, with the establishment of the Barcelona process, which places human rights at the centre of the Euro-Mediterranean partnership. The Union has also continued to apply a policy of "critical dialogue" with Iran with a view to influencing its policy in certain areas affecting human rights; - Latin America, with the implementation of a new 1996-2000 partnership focusing on the consolidation of democracy and the rule of law. In addition, a process of rapprochement has been initiated with Cuba; - Africa, where dialogue continued with all the states affected by the Great Lakes crisis and a European mediator was sent to the region. Several joint declarations were made condemning the atrocities committed in the region and a number of humanitarian initiatives were taken (release of ECU 169 million in addition to the ECU 500 million already granted in emergency aid). Other initiatives have also been taken, especially in Burundi (following the military coup) and Rwanda. In addition, the Union officially called for a regional peace conference for the region. Finally, as far as dialogue with the European Parliament was concerned, the Council had replied to some 120 written or verbal questions raised by members in 1996, a quarter of which referred to the human rights situation in Turkey and Cyprus.?

Human rights: activities of the European Union in 1996. Annual memorandum

This was one of the conclusions reached by José BARROS MOURA (PES, P), whose report on human rights in the world (1997/98) was adopted unanimously by the Committee. Mr Barros Moura placed particular emphasis on this new dimension of the problem and on the need to go beyond the usual approach of simply evaluating whether or not human rights were being observed. He believed the issue needed to be raised not only with states and the EU institutions but also with all economic and social actors as well as the international institutions. The effects of globalisation meant that action was needed more urgently than ever in various fields. Civil and political rights, although still essential, were not in themselves enough to ensure respect for human dignity. The committee deplored "the devastating social consequences of Third World debt" and called on international financial institutions "to integrate the respect of fundamental social, economic, civil, political and cultural rights in their activities". It called on the Commission and Council to actively promote a reform of the international financial institutions to achieve greater transparency in market movements and stronger supervision of financial markets. The business community also needed to face up to its responsibilities. New voluntary codes of conduct should be encouraged and MEPs rejected the contention that the introduction of a code of conduct obliging EU-based companies to observe human rights norms in their operations in third countries was not possible within Community law as it stood. They also reaffirmed support for the creation of a "social label", to ensure observance of human rights by companies operating in developing countries. In addition, the report not only highlights the difficulty of exercising rights which could be described as "traditional", by denouncing violations of such rights (e.g. of refugees, minorities and women), it also emphasises "new" rights (economic, social and sexual), which are violated particularly often in the case of women and children. In this connection, the committee regrets that three Member States have not yet signed ILO Convention 138 on Child Labour. The report also reaffirms its belief that an International Criminal Court is needed to deal with genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes. Lastly, Mr Barros Moura's report says loud and clear that Parliament will not hesitate to withhold its assent from international agreements which do not contain appropriate human rights provisions.?

Human rights: activities of the European Union in 1996. Annual memorandum

The European Parliament adopted its tenth report on human rights in the world and the EU's human rights policy, drafted by Mr. José BARROS MOURA (PES, E). The report recalls a number of principles and positions adopted by the Parliament. These include : - respect for freedom of expression; - the complete abolition of the death penalty; - equitable and humane policies with respect to asylum seekers and refugees in the EU; - improved recognition and protection of the rights of communities, minorities and indigenous populations; - need for actions to combat sex tourism and to pursue persons involved in the sexual exploitation of children; - elimination of children labour and introduction of just social standards; - recognition that rape in time of war should constitute a war crime; - introduction of legal reforms with respect to inheritance and rights of succession. The Parliament called for a reform of the international financial institutions and the adoption of a code of conduct for companies working in developing countries. It also reaffirmed its support for the creation of a 'Social Label'. It also called for the speedy adoption of the Council Regulation concerning the legal basis for the promotion of human rights and democracy by the European Union and the establishment of a Human Rights Forum. The Forum would be empowered to make recommendations on the human rights dimension of EU policies and to evaluate the EU's human rights related activities; the Forum should include experts from international organisations, NGOs and the academic world, as well as representative of the Parliament, Commission and Council. Another important plea from the Parliament's point of view was to the Council, Commission and Member States to withhold assistance to regimes which devote excessive resources to military hardware.?
