Action to combat racism, xenophobia, antisemitism in the countries applicant for membership

PURPOSE : to give an overview of measures which can contribute to countering racism, xenophobia and anti-semitism in the candidate countries. CONTENT : The scale of the minorities problem was illustrated in Agenda 2000 and continues to be a recurring problem in the following terms: minorities account for 44% of the population in Latvia (where 34% are Russian), 38% in Estonia (30% Russian), 20% in Lithuania (9% Russian, 7% Polish), 18% in Slovakia (11% Hungarian, 5% Roma), 14% in Bulgaria (9% Turks, 5% Roma) and 13% in Romania (8% Hungarian, 4% Roma). The presence of these minorities is the cause of racist and xenophobic sentiments against which so many of the candidate countries, like the Community, intend to mobilise themselves. In addition, it is an opportunity to remember that human rights and fundamental freedoms constitute a general principle of Community law and one of the principle motors of accession. In order to help the candidate countries adopt the necessary measures in terms of the fight against racism, the Union has at its disposal a battery of actions or programmes applicable to candidate countries. This support is channelled mainly through the Phare programme (and more specifically "Phare Democracy" which has now been integrated in the 'European Initiative for Democracy and Human Rights') and the Meda programme for Turkey. In the same way, the candidate countries have adopted government plans or programmes to protect and promote minorities and tackle racism. However, there is a lack of resources which are needed in order to deepen the envisaged actions; this is why the Union intends to put in place other possibilities for actions by basing itself on the experience that it has acquired in this area. Also, consistent with the strategies to prepare the candidates for EU membership, efforts should focus on, wherever possible, opening Community programmes, agencies and activities to the participation of the candidate countries, in particular : 1) the Action Plan against Racism (see procedure COS/2068/1999) which prepares the ground for more ambitious action at European level under the new provisions of the Treaty on non-discrimination, in order to integrate the fight against racism in Community policies (a report is awaited from the Commission on the subject and a part of it will deal with actions undertaken in the candidate countries); 2) the European Monitoring Centre on Racism and Xenophobia (see procedure CNS/0268/1996) set up in Vienna following Council Regulation EC/1035/1999 has as its principal objective the study of the extent and the development of manifestations of xenophobia and of anti-Semitism within the Union. Since 1999, (see procedure CNS/0143/1998) the European Monitoring Centre has signed an agreement with the Council of Europe in order to extend its field of action. This collaboration will enable common activities to be carried out within the EU and in the remaining 25 countries of the Council of Europe, including all the candidate countries. As a first practical measure to implement the agreement with the Council of Europe, the Monitoring Centre has proposed a joint project on the situation of the Roma people. The centre will also work in close cooperation with organisations in the Member States and also international organisations. In the meantime, the possibilities for establishing informal cooperation between the Monitoring Centre and the candidate countries could be explored; 3) the implementation of the non-discrimination provisions of the Amsterdam treaty (Article 13): in addition to the implementation of legislative measures aiming to prohibit discrimination on grounds of racial and ethnic origin in a range of social and economic fields, legislation that will be applicable to the candidate countries, the Commission is exploring the possibility of proposing incentive measures to combat social exclusion under Article 137 of the EC Treaty. Such measures could also be applicable to participation by candidate countries; 4) the use of programmes concerning Education, Vocational training and Youth programmes as instruments in the fight against racism and xenophobia in candidate countries: programmes such as Leonardo, Youth and Socrates are already open to candidate countries and may provide support to a wide range of initiatives tackling racism and xenophobia; 5) actions with Social partners and Civil Society: NGOs are principal actors for change in society and the European Commission will continue to support the development of civil society in candidate countries. However, governments should also be encouraged to involve NGOs in all aspects of their work to combat racism. Finally, the Commission will continue to strengthen its cooperation with other international organisations, and more particularly the United Nations, the Council of Europe and the OSCE. In addition, the preparations for the World Conference on Racism which will be held in 2001, will provide a good opportunity for the EU to work closely with the candidate countries.?

Action to combat racism, xenophobia, antisemitism in the countries applicant for membership

The committee adopted a report by Bastiaan BELDER (EDD, NL) on the fight against racism, xenophobia and antisemitism in the candidate countries, saying that adequate funding was essential to ensure the success of the EU initiative to support democracy and human rights as well as projects on human rights and the protection of minorities under the MEDA programme. The committee called on the candidate countries and the Member States to ratify and implement as a matter of urgency not only the international convention on the abolition of all forms of racial discrimination but also the Council of Europe's framework convention on the protection of national minorities and the European charter on regional and minority languages. The report also stressed that racism, xenophobia and antisemitism remained a serious problem in the European Union. It therefore called for close cooperation between the Union and the candidate countries to combat the problem and wanted violent racist crimes to be thoroughly investigated. The committee called on the candidate countries to continue taking action against racism and xenophobia and believed the EU also had a duty to ensure that the process of social change in the candidate countries did not lead to a rise in social tension, with the risk of increasing racism this would entail. NGOs from the EU and the candidate countries, as well as representatives of ethnic groups, needed to be involved (and given sufficient financial support) in these efforts. The report also stressed the important role of the media in disseminating information and values to the whole of society. The committee wanted further progress to be made on the problem of integrating, and granting equal treatment to, the Russian minorities in Estonia and Latvia. It also called for a coordinated approach on discrimination against gypsy minorities and regretted the fact that the Commission's paper failed to propose specific measures to combat discrimination against refugees.

Action to combat racism, xenophobia, antisemitism in the countries applicant for membership

The European Parliament adopted its resolution on countering racism in the candidate countries drafted by M. Bastiaan BELDER (EDD, NL). The Parliament calls on the Commission and the Member States to take action and provide adequate financial measures aimed at helping the candidate countries in regard to human rights and the protection of minority rights. Member States and the candidate countries are also urged to ensure that their policies towards asylum seekers, refugees and immigrants are free of xenophobia and racism and provide a proper statutory framework of rights with full respect for the Geneva Convention on Refugees. The Parliament calls on the candidate countries to implement legislation similar to expected EU laws and with effective enforcement bodies : to counter institutional racism ; to protect minorities ; to safeguard minority languages ; to eliminate racism in public life, housing and employment ; and to develop their educational programmes to broaden awareness of the dangers of racism and xenophobia. It also wants full attention to be paid to countering racism, xenophobia and anti-semitism in the educational and training programmes for police officers, officials of judicial authorities and other public sector officials, and, in particular, those who are in direct contact with the general public. According to the EP, the Commission should ensure that the European Monitoring Centre on Racism and Xenophobia makes an appropriate contribution to extending the fight against racism, xenophobia and anti-semitism to the candidate countries and that it will cooperate as closely as possible with the Council of Europe's ECRI. It asks the European Monitoring Centre to prepare short reports on each candidate country indicating the minimum practical steps necessary to reach EU standards in respect of the fight against racism, xenophobia and anti-semitism. The European Parliament also stresses the importance of involving NGOs, grass roots organisations, trades unions, women's and youth organisations and ethnic group organisations in activities to counter racism, xenophobia and anti-semitism. The Parliament regrets the rise of organised racism in a number of the candidate countries and calls for the coordination of legislation against racial discrimination and urges the EU and candidate countries to cooperate closely to combat extremist and criminal racist organisations and organised crime including trafficking in migrants, and for both to pursue vigorously the prosecution of violent racist offences. It considers that effective action will not only involve appropriate constitutional arrangements and the separation of powers but also the proper functioning of local courts and the local civil service, and calls on the Commission to monitor these aspects.?
