Economic and monetary union EMU and the euro: strategy of communication and information up to 2002

PURPOSE : the purpose of the present Communication is to report on the communications strategy in the last phases of the completion of the EMU. CONTENT : the European Union is in the final phase of a journey into Economic and Monetary Union. From 01/01/2002, banks will issue only euro notes and coins. Member States will make their best efforts to ensure that the bulk of cash transactions will be made by euro by the end of a fortnight from 01/01/2002, and, by the beginning of March 2002, the withdrawal of national notes and coins should be complete. Preparing for this is a formidable challenge. It calls for sustained and concentrated communication campaigns so that all actors can meet it successfully. Turning to what remains to be done before 2002, we notice that SMEs are still not taking the changeover to the euro seriously enough; the use of the euro has been significantly less than was anticipated before the introduction of the euro on 01/01/1999; and most people have received some information on the single currency but may be ignoring it. The Commission specifies that the campaigns should be targeted at a number of groups such as, enterprises (especially SMEs); the general public and non-participant countries. The sequence of events is as follows: - in 2000, enterprises should be targeted intensely so that they can take all the necessary actions in good time. A steady flow of information to the general public should also be maintained: not only do people need to know that an intensive campaign will give them all the information they need in good time but they also need to be reassured of the benefits of the single currency and kept informed of details of the changeover. The Commission has stressed the importance of transmitting the message to children, of primary school age, so that they, in turn, can teach adults. National and local authorities should also make a start on training trainers and identifying and mobilising individuals and groups able to help the vulnerable; - in 2001, the campaign will target both the general public and its more vulnerable sections should be intensified: citizens need to become acquainted with the look of the notes and the coins. The campaign for businesses must be continued and be readjusted as necessary to take account of the changing situation. The campaign will need to continue into the early months of 2002, during the period of dual circulation and possibly beyond.?

Economic and monetary union EMU and the euro: strategy of communication and information up to 2002

In a working document, the Commission provides an update on the initiatives that it has taken regarding information with a view to preparing citizens and businesses for the euro. The Commission recalls that in the context of the information campaign 'The euro, one currency for Europe' launched as part of the PRINCE Programme, the Commission established bilateral partnerships with the Member States, the main purpose of which is the conclusion of agreements between the Commission and the national governments that seek to encourage and co-finance communication actions in the Member States concerning the euro. In 1999, the Commission signed 13 agreements in total with the eleven countries in the euro area, plus Greece and Sweden, for a total budget of 204 billion euros. This document then goes on to outline the information products on the euro prepared by the Commission for citizens and consumers: publications for the general public and educational institutions, internet site, CD-ROM, groups of external conference speakers, demonstration stands, videos, two-monthly newsletter, etc. The Commission has compiled a list of actions, already under way or to come, for the preparation of businesses for the euro: actions undertaken by the Euro Info Centres, preparation kits for companies, calls for proposals in the area of training on the euro, seminars, meetings and conferences, surveys on the use of the euro, use of the regional press, contribution to the Expo 2000 in Hanover, preparation of a guide for tourists, round table in Brussels. The document mentions initiatives such as Euro Made Easy and a range of other European pilot projects that have been co-funded by the Commission since 1997 and the purpose of which is to create information and training tools, in order to facilitate the transition to the euro for the most vulnerable sectors of the population: those in economic or social difficulty, the elderly, the blind or visually impaired, the deaf and hard-of-hearing, the mentally handicapped.?

---

The committee adopted the report by Othmar KARAS (EPP/ED, A) on the Commission communication setting out the strategy for the euro information campaign in the run-up to 2002. The report called for the funding earmarked for 2001 to be increased from EUR 35m to EUR 38m given that the campaign needed to be stepped up in the final stages. It pointed out that the campaign should be extended by a further 6 months up to mid-2002 (i.e. after the introduction of euro notes and coins in January 2002) with a budget of EUR 20 m for that period. The committee also wanted greater efforts to be made to explain the practicalities of the new currency for small businesses, which, unlike large enterprises, had not yet started to make the necessary adjustments. It called for the campaign to address women as a specific target group, as polls showed that women still had serious concerns about the introduction of the euro, and to take particular account of the needs of special categories of people such as the blind and the elderly. Children were another important target group and the committee put forward various ideas for raising awareness including essay and painting competitions and giving all children born in 2001 a euro savings book. Other points raised by the report included the need for close coordination of the information campaigns of the EP, the Commission and the Member States with the European Central Bank's campaign and the need for the Commission to take firm action to stop the double charging of customers and bring down the high bank charges for cross-border transactions. ?

The European Parliament adopted a resolution based on the report by Othmar KARAS (EPP/ED, Austria) on the Commission's communication strategy in the last phases of the completion of EMU. Parliament welcomed the communication and supported the sequencing of the campaign, the emphasis of which will be SME's in 2000, because of their longer preparatory time, all target groups in 2001, and specifically, the general public after 2001. The campaign should also include information on the economic and monetary policy of the Union. Special attention needs to be given to certain categories of the population with particular difficulties of access to information such as the elderly, blind people, people with a mental disability, and the socially disadvantaged, since these categories require a form of education rather than mere information. The training of trainers should be stepped up immediately. The important role of children and young people in disseminating information is also stressed. Parliament recommended in the context of the world savings week introduced by the banks, the introduction of a "euro savings day" with information and encouragement for opening a euro savings account. Savings accounts could also be given automatically to all children born in 2001. In view of the broadening debate on the external value of the euro, the campaign should put across in tangible and clear terms, the demonstrable effects of the common currency on the European internal market, on price and currency stability and growth and employment. Parliament called for the funding of the euro information campaign in the year 2001 to be at least EUR 38 million. In the light of the ECOFIN Council's decision to shorten the period of parallel currency to two months, the information campaign should be extended to mid-2002 and should have a budget of at least EUR 20 million in that year. Parliament also called on the Commission to take firm and immediate action to stop the double charging of customers and to bring down the high bank charges for cross-border transfers in the euro area.?
