Common fisheries policy after 2002: meetings at regional level in 1998-1999. Report

PURPOSE : Commission Communication on the results of 30 regional meetings held from September 1998 until June 1999 on the Common Fisheries Policy (CFP) after 2002. CONTENT : The regional meetings formed the second phase of the consultation process on the CFP after 2002. The meetings showed that there is a large consensus to pursue the CFP beyond 2002, but the parties consulted believe that many of its components need to be reviewed, modified or even completely changed. The main conclusions are as follows: - on the issue of access to the 6/12 mile zone, there are virtually no demands for the establishment of a free access regime "up to the beaches". -with regard to access to the North Sea, fisherman from Spain, Portugal, Finland and Sweden support the abolition of all discriminatory restrictions. Organisations from North Sea coastal states expressed concern about the increase in fishing effort in the North Sea. -the retention of the Shetland Box did not receive unanimous support. Many organisations in Spain, the Netherlands and a large federation in the United Kingdom believe that the establishment of the Box has no scientific basis and is purely political in nature. -On TACs and Quotas, it was widely held that these had failed to restrict stock exploitation rates due to lack of proper enforcement and sound scientific advice. Suggestions were made on the improvement of the regime. -Most of the participants were against Individual Transferable Quotas (ITQs), fearing the creation of oligopolies and the loss of jobs. There was more support for the ITQs in the Netherlands, Spain and Denmark. -the principle of relative stability was widely supported. Ireland and Northern Ireland made strong demands for changes in the relative stability keys. -The current discard rules were heavily criticised and the landing of all catches was widely supported by fisherman in some Member States. -The current definition of fishing effort, as far as the engine power element is concerned, was strongly criticised in Italy, Greece, Netherlands and Portugal. On MAGPs, Belgium, Germany and Portugal favoured stronger penalties on States not meeting their targets. The United Kingdom and Finland criticised MAGPs and asked for greater flexibility. -Fisherman asked for greater protection of the marine environment against land-based pollution and other industrial activities. - In the case of bilateral fisheries agreements, there is a clear split between the North and the South. Fisherman from countries benefiting from Community funded agreements asked for the strengthening of the external fisheries policy. -On the markets and trade in fishery products, processors asked for easier access to raw materials and fisherman asked for more protection from low-priced imports. -The proposal for a new FIGG regulation was clarified. -With regard to enforcement and monitoring, there was a widespread demand for a level-playing field throughout the Union. -On fisheries research, many fisherman argued that scientific data are often flawed and there is more fish to be fished. -The aquaculture sector complained of lack of support from the Community. -Many participants emphasised the "specificity" of Mediterranean fisheries. -There was a unanimous request for greater transparency on the part of the Commission and for greater participation in the elaboration of Community decisions.?

Common fisheries policy after 2002: meetings at regional level in 1998-1999. Report

The committee adopted the report by Bernard POIGNANT (PES, F) on the Commission report on the future of the CFP. In the light of the consultations the Commission had held at regional level with interested parties for the purposes of drawing up its report, the committee listed various issues which would need to be reviewed as part of the overhaul of the CFP. These included the derogation on access to resources for the 6/12-mile zone and the continuation of access restrictions, e.g. to the Shetland Box and the North Sea. As regards the TACs and quotas, the committee favoured a continuation of the current system but stressed that the possibility of establishing variants of individual quotas should not be overlooked. It also backed the Commission's wish to extend the fourth Multiannual Guidance Programme (POP IV) until the end of 2002 but called for a fresh census to be made of fishing vessels in the Community. ?

The European Parliament adopted this resolution by Mr Bernard POIGNANT (PES, F). The MEPs approved an amendment which 'insists that closed areas should not be discriminatory in any way on the basis of nationality and that the possible creation of spatio-temporal definition thereof should be based exclusively on scientific opinions which specifically call for this'. In addition, the resolution calls on the Commission to reflect on the derogation on access to resources for the 6/12-mile zone and calls on the Commission to ensure that, in the event of controversy, the status quo is maintained. Moreover, the Parliament supports the continuation of the current system of TACs and quotas and recommends the introduction of incentives to reduce the number of discards. The Commission's position on extending Multiannual Guidance Programme IV up to the end of 2002 is supported by the Parliament. The aim of this is to achieve as good a balance as possible between fishing effort and available stocks. The Parliament recognises the role that international fisheries agreements play in the supply of the European market and emphasises that joint ventures with third countries should be supported and encouraged. The Council and the Commission are both called upon to support scientific, technical and economic research in order help it establish itself as an indisputable authority. The introduction of an effective regulatory system for the Mediterranean was also proposed by the Parliament.?
