MEDA programme, Mediterranean countries (Regulation (EC) No 1488/96). Annual report 2000

PURPOSE : to present the Annual report of the MEDA Programme 2000. CONTENT : five years after its launch, the Barcelona Process and its MEDA Programme saw a substantial review in the year 2000. This happened against the backdrop of the worsening situation in the Middle East which had a considerable impact on the Euro-Mediterranean Partnership. Two Euro-Mediterranean Foreign Ministers conferences were held. Based on a Commission Communication, Ministers in Marseilles in November 2000 agreed on a series of measures to reinvigorate the Barcelona Process. The Euro-Mediterranean Association Agreements with Morocco and Israel entered into force. Negotiations for the agreements resumed with Algeria, Lebanon and Syria. Ratification of the agreement with Jordan progressed while the obstacles to the initialling of the agreement with Egypt were removed and led to the Association Agreement's signature on 25 June 2001. In November the Council decided a major amendment to the MEDA regulation (MEDA II). The regulation provides for a strategic programming approach, reinforced dialogue with the partner countries and simplified procedures for faster delivery of aid. In this context, the Commission embarked on a wide-ranging reform of its external aid management which led to the creation of the EuropeAid Cooperation Office. As regards financial cooperation grants and loans committed for the Euro-Mediterranean Partnership activities in 2000 totalled EUR 2.2 billion out of which a large share was supplied by the MEDA Programme. Parts of this sum were due to reconstruction aid following the 1999 earthquake in Turkey and recommitted funds from previous years. In 2000 committed MEDA funds amounted to EUR 879 million. Payments made up EUR 330.5 million (up from EUR 243 million in 1999). Commitments for the Maghreb totalled EUR 246 million, for the Mashrek EUR 163 million and for Turkey EUR 310 million; regional cooperation received funding of EUR 159 million in 2000. In addition, EUR 123 million were committed for the Mediterranean region from other EU budget lines. For 2000-2006 the Council decided to endow MEDA with EUR 5,350 million (laid down in the MEDA II regulation). These grants from the Community budget are accompanied by considerable lending from the European Investment Bank. For the same period the EIB's Euromed lending mandate is EUR 6,400 million. The Bank committed itself to contribute a further EUR 1,000 million from its own resources and at its own risk for transnational projects. In total, EUR 12.75 billion will be available for Euro-Mediterranean Partnership activities over the 7-year period starting from 2000. Bilateral cooperation with nine Mediterranean Partners accounted for about 82% of the MEDA 2000 commitments (EUR 719,3 million). Facilities for direct budgetary support made up the biggest share. Structural adjustment facilities received EUR 150 million (Turkey) and sectoral adjustment facilities EUR 142 million (Morocco, Tunisia) while EUR 90 million were earmarked for the Special Cash Facility II for the Palestinian Authority. I should also be noted that regional cooperation advanced significantly in 2000 through the launching of programmes and projects in the field of industrial cooperation, environment, information society, local water management, transport, energy, audio-visual, cultural heritage, Middle East peace projects and economic and social matters. Visibility of the Euro-Mediterranean Partnership as well as the role of the EU in this policy area were strengthened through a large tool kit of publications, information visits and the cultural activities of the Delegations in the Mediterranean region. In addition, the European Investment Bank signed 19 loans in eight Mediterranean partner countries in 2000 amounting to commitments of EUR 1193 million (up from EUR 945 million in 1999 due to infrastructure reconstruction in Turkey). The EIB also managed EUR 106 million in MEDA funds for interest rate subsidies for three bilateral environmental project loans and four risk capital operations. Lastly, three evaluation reports on the operations of the EIB, the MEDA Teams and the global allocation of MEDA over the period 1995-2000 were produced.?

The committee adopted the own-initiative report by Yves PIÉTRASANTA (Greens/EFA, F) on the annual report on the MEDA 2000 programme. It began by reaffirming its support for the Euro-Mediterranean partnership and welcoming the new provisions for the MEDA II programme. It noted the improvement in the payment-to-commitment ratio and urged the Commission to achieve even greater efficiency in the use of credits as well as "a significant decrease in 'sleeping' commitments (RAL)". It stressed, however, that such improvements in the programme should also be accompanied by more precise targeting of the real issues and the setting of objectives which reflected these realities. The Commission was also asked to pay particular attention to laying down the optimum size for projects in order to avoid actions being fragmented into a large number of micro-projects, which were difficult to monitor. The committee singled out a number of priority areas, including reforms in the institutional sector, and called on the Commission to report to it before Parliament's 1st reading of the 2004 budget on the progress made in this field by the beneficiary countries. It also wanted to see social action programmes to protect the disabled and forms of regional cooperation concerning the protection of children. Other recommendations included: - rapidly launching the Euro-Mediterranean Foundation for dialogue between cultures and civilisations and the Observatory on Migration; - concluding as soon as possible the negotiations on a Syria/EU Association Agreement so as to complete the network of Euro-Mediterranean association agreements; - effective implementation of the arrangements adopted in the Barcelona Declaration on democratisation and respect for human rights: the committee pointed out that the key criterion for eligibility for MEDA funds was respect for human rights by the beneficiary countries; - incorporation of the gender dimension and hence of respect for and the promotion of women's rights in the Barcelona process; - relaunching as soon as possible the project selection and planning processes for MEDA-funded programmes currently suspended in Israel and Palestine; - greater funding for regional projects and a better balance between bilateral and regional cooperation; - appropriate monitoring and auditing of projects; - greater emphasis on renewable energies; - development of the information society and use of the Internet, by investing in training and education in schools. Lastly, the committee reiterated its support for the official establishment of a Euro-Mediterranean parliamentary assembly at the EuroMed ministerial conference in Naples scheduled for December 2003.?

The European Parliament adopted its own-initiative report drafted by Yves PIETRASANTA (Greens/EFA, France) on the annual report on the MEDA 2000 programme. (Please see the summary of 25/03/03.) Parliament stated that a free trade area could only function and bring prosperity if the economic, productive and technological capabilities of the countries involved are at similar levels. Inequalities and instabilities in the social fabric, which lead to exclusion and poverty, are the principal factors to be targeted in the MEDA programme. The progress made in the field of budget implementation since the introduction of MEDA II, as shown by various indicators, must be examined within the context of MEDA II's main objective, which is to tackle the five challenges of population, employment and migration, globalisation and dwindling of resources, as well as the environmental challenge. Parliament stated its conviction of the need to tackle the issues behind these five challenges. Such an approach would require a review of the structural challenges posed by the MEDA countries. These include trade flows, regional disparities, disparities in income between the MEDA countries and between social classes in the partner countries, the legal and institutional framework to encourage the development of non-governmental initiatives, the underdevelopment of the financial intermediary sector, budgetary policy characterised by uncontrolled expenditure. There is a need for the rapid launch of the Euro-Mediterranean Foundation for dialogue between cultures and civilisations and the monitoring centre for migration. Parliament condemned the minuscule share of funding allocated to the Mediterranean countries from the European Initiative for Democracy and Human Rights (EIDHR). It called for a more diversified range of target beneficiary countries. It did not approve the Commission's decision not to include among the beneficiaries of these programmes, countries where civil society is active, yet still fragile. The European Parliament should be consulted on the selection of target countries. A dynamic civil society is central to the social and political development of the MEDA countries. Parliament asked the Commission to implement a policy of active support for independent organisations, associations and trade unions. Finally, Parliament repeated its support for the official establishment of an Euro-Mediterranean parliamentary assembly, which should become one of the institutions of the Barcelona Process. The assembly should have the power to make recommendations to the ministerial bodies.?
