OJ L 357 31.12.1994, p. 0001 Summary

EC/Romania Europe agreement

This proposal for a decision sought to conclude an Association Agreement between the Community and its Member States and Romania. It was a mixed agreement covering areas of both Community and national competence, concluded for an unlimited period. It aimed essentially to establish a free trade area between the Community and its Member States and Romania. It included for the first time political dialogue and cultural cooperation and had as a framework the future accession of Romania to the European Community. In particular, the agreement provided for: - a transitional period of 10 years consisting of two periods of five years, which did not apply to the trade provisions, - the creation of a free trade area covering all products with a mutual yet asymmetrical liberalisation process between the parties, - separate protocols for sensitive products (textiles, coal and steel, and processed agricultural products), - rules of origin and provisions relating to customs cooperation, - the improvement of the situation of Romanian workers residing legally in the Community, - national treatment with regard to free establishment and the provision of services by Romanian operators operating in the Community, - the liberalisation of the movement of capital and payments and the harmonisation of legislation, - increased financial cooperation through the allocation of non-refundable aid (e.g. Phare), EIB loans or actions providing technical macro-economic assistance, - an association council meeting at least once a year which would have certain decision-making powers, as well as an association parliamentary committee of an advisory nature. This agreement replaced the former economic and trade cooperation agreement concluded between the Community and Romania. ?

EC/Romania Europe agreement

The rapporteur suggested that Parliament should give its assent to conclusion of the association agreement between the Community and its Member States and Romania. He saw this association agreement as an essential factor for stability and security in the Balkans. The agreement would govern all economic and trade relations between the two parties and would replace the trade and cooperation agreement signed on 1 May 1991. It was to be concluded for an indefinite period, with an initial transitional period of 10 years. Following a first 5-year phase, a specific decision would be taken on whether to proceed to a second phase for matters other than trade. ?

EC/Romania Europe agreement

The Council approved this decision concerning the conclusion of a European association agreement between the Community and its Member States and Romania. It was a mixed agreement covering areas of Community and national responsibility, concluded for an unlimited period. It aimed essentially to establish a free trade area between the Community and its Member States and Romania. It included for the first time political dialogue and cultural cooperation and had as a framework the future accession of Romania to the European Community. In particular, the agreement provided for: - a transitional period of 10 years consisting of two periods of five years, which did not apply to the trade provisions, - the creation of a free trade area covering all products with a mutual yet asymmetrical liberalisation process between the parties, - separate protocols for sensitive products (textiles, coal and steel, and processed agricultural products), - rules of origin and provisions relating to customs cooperation, - the improvement of the situation of Romanian workers residing legally in the Community, - national treatment with regard to free establishment and the provision of services by Romanian operators operating in the Community, - the liberalisation of the movement of capital and payments and the harmonisation of legislation, - increased financial cooperation through the allocation of non-refundable aid (e.g. Phare), EIB loans or actions providing technical macro-economic assistance, - an association council meeting at least once a year which would have certain decision-making powers, as well as an association parliamentary committee of an advisory nature. This agreement replaced the former economic and trade cooperation agreement concluded between the Community and Romania on 22 October 1990. Following the conclusion of the ratification procedures by the contracting parties, this agreement entered into force on 1 January 1995. ?
